

Leisure Activities

The bell rang, signaling the end of another long day at school. As the students rushed out of the classroom, Sarah and Liam lingered behind. “Ready for some fun?” Sarah asked, her eyes sparkling with excitement. Liam looked a little weary. “Fun? I’m not sure I’m up for anything too energetic today.”

Sarah laughed. “Don’t worry, Liam, I’ve got the perfect plan. We can go to the park and play some basketball.” Liam grimaced. “Basketball? I’d rather be curled up with a good book, to be honest. I just finished the first chapter of this amazing fantasy novel, and I can’t wait to see what happens next.”

Sarah looked at Liam with a mixture of amusement and understanding. “You’re such a bookworm. Indeed, there’s something really relaxing about reading. It’s like escaping into another world. Maybe I’ll join you later. But first, I need to get my energy out!” Liam smiled. “I’ll be here, waiting for you. Just don’t get too sweaty!”

As Sarah headed out the door, Liam settled into a nearby chair and opened his book. He loved the way the words flowed over him, transporting him to faraway lands and exciting adventures. He knew Sarah wouldn't understand, but that was okay. They were friends, and they respected each other's unique ways of enjoying their free time.

Later that evening, Sarah returned, her face flushed and her hair slightly damp. "That was awesome! I scored the winning basket, and it was so satisfying! But I'm exhausted now. Maybe I'll join you with your book." Liam chuckled. "You're welcome to join me anytime, Sarah." Sarah grinned. "Maybe not, but I'm sure I'll find something to keep me entertained. After all, there's nothing quite like a good book to unwind after a day of basketball."